The church was about two-thirds filled with auditors, comprising both ladies and gentlemen; and there was a fine band of music in the gallery to enliven the performances.

The orator, in rising, stated that he had chosen a theme which he trusted would not be considered inappropriate, and which, however much discussed, could never be exhausted. It was: Man himself, and the principle upon which his highest development is formed, and by which his life is governed

The following are merely the points in the oration, the delivery of which occupied more than an hour, and was listened to with marked atten an hour, and was listened to with marked attention:

It is a high distinction to be a MAN. All mature serves him; all things are for his use. Physically, he is a most wonderful being, the very paragon of animals; erect in form, symmetrical in all his parts; of majestic mien; luminous eyes, speaking a soul of affection, and with expressive tongue, uttering praise, and imperishable mind, he stands alone, without a peer among terrestrial beings. These, however, are not his glory; but the sriair that moves him, and emanates from Heaven. There is no type of it on earth; its archetype is God. The human body is its vesture. Like the Sun, in its influence upon the earth, it gives the body all its glory. It makes him strong, his tongue eloquent, and his bearing lofty. It is the power mysterious that thinks and feels, loves, hates, suffers, and enjoys. It fills the present, encompasses the past, and occupies the future. It turns things to shape, and "gives to airy hothing a local habitation and a name." It recalls the speculations of the past, and gives them a new and more profound significance and worthier acceptation. It measures distant stars and ascertains the velocity of light, and subjects the sunbeams to analysis. '[These were mentioned by the reverend gentleman as among the intellectual powers.]

But the power emotional is greater. It stirs

But the power emotional is greater. It stirs earth, hell, and heaven. How wonderful is man's influence in Heaven! His smile is there reflected influence in Heaven! His smile is there reflected on myriads of faces—his tears are there treasured—his slightest whispers are heard, and he realizes from God the answers to his prayers. The Arch Fiend, however, supplies man with the weapons of rebellion against his Maker, by presenting to him ambition, visions of glory, and tempting offers; promising him, from some proud summit, the pomp and pageantry of earth, if he will fall down and worship him. And this wondrous being, of origin so high, of powers so noble, and mind so comprehensive, must exist forever in a world brighter than this—an elysium brighter than the poet's dream; or must exist forever in a world gloomier than Tartarus or Pandemonium.

The glory of mere terrestrial objects can satisfy no just ambition. In every thing lawful, however, it is man's duty to aspire to the highest rank; not like Esau, who sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, and instead of a prince become the vilest serf. Some men, sychophants, are any thing, however low, to provoke the nod of recognition or the smile of favor from those above them; to lag behind at a respectful distance or to touch the hem of the garments of notables occupying high efficial station! How often do men claim to to lag behind at a respectful distance or to touch the hem of the garments of notables occupying high official station! How often do men claim to be servants of the people that they may become their masters; they talk of the public good that they may make it their private gain, and profess the sacred name of patriotism with treason lurking in their hearts. Devoting themselves to party, not from principle, they aspire to places of trust with no disinterested emotions, but with a view to self-aggrandizement and the emoluments of office. And with reference to this, how strange, in many instances, is their conduct; how marked by folly and guilt! It is possible to deceive man, but not God. Sometimes such persons counterfeit the saint, and "steal the livery of the court of Heaven to serve the devil in." They are false—traitors to God and to truth; every thing by turns to accomplish their ends.

Gold, which is a standard of value, cannot measure a man's just appreciation of himself. He re-

Gold, which is a standard of value, cannot measure a man's just appreciation of himself. He respects himself, because he is faithful in heart to the relations which life imposes. He loves and reveres God, and blesses men. He lives for principle and duty more than for self-enjoyment. If convinced of sin he is miserable. He has, in high development, the moral sense. He is a man of conscience, as is shown by his actions. "I would rather be right than President," said a distinguished statesman of noble form and bearing, whose eloquence has often enchained the hearts of many prove present. However much others may dissent present. However much others may dissent the sentiment, it is that of a true man. He would rather be "right" than have a position, high or great, obtained through dishonorable means—discarding all pomp and power rather than yield his honesty. He is not one of your mild, amiable characters, of whom men speak with mingled praise and contempt. He is not alike undecided on every subject, nor does he seek to mystify. But on all important subjects his position is clearly defined, and all know what it is. When new questions arise, he will fearlessly avow his opinions as soon as he comprehends them. He does not wait to discover the popular current of thought and opinion. He does not pause for the watchword of the people before his own voice is raised. He is not presumptuous, but thinks for himself; he is not rash, but acts promptly. When he kake a position he stands by it. Some men take a wrong position and will stubbornly maintain it, and will never be moved by eloquence, no matter how powerful. They pay honor to error for the sake of consistency, while truth and beauty are in vain wooing their embrace. Not so with the honorable man, the true man. Walpole was a libeller when he said that every man has his price. The only price of a true way is taken. a libeller when he said that every man has his price. The only price of a true man is truth, honor, virtue, and the approbation of God.

Another quality of the true man is courage; no man can be a patriot and a christian without it. He will feel it to be his duty to oppose popular error, although he may be cast out a victim of ostracism. [The orator then described this quality, which did not consist, he said, in blood and muscle, or nerves even, but in the heart—in the moral sense. "The wicked fleeth when no man pursueth; but the righteous is as bold as a lion."

Another attribute of the true man is HONESTY He does not seek undue advantage. He would rather suffer loss than gain unjustly. He is hon-est for honesty's sake, and from a reverence for God, whose spirit is in his bosom.

But acries is necessary to the development of these principles, and development depends on self-action. The child would not become strong and brawny in the nurse's arms; and so the mind to become vigorous and truly great, must have self-exercise. All really great men are self-made. Books, travel, society, merely will not suffice. Mon may pursue many books, may graduate at college, and yet be fools. Had many a one enjoyed more of solitude, and, like the Greek, when he wanted a book, wrote one, it would perhaps have been better. The duties necessary to constitute the true man cannot be performed by stitute the true man cannot be performed by proxy.

Every man is responsible for all he is able to achieve. As man derives wealth by inheritance or from the community itself, and is dependent on the community for the value of his wealth, he owes the community obligations, and the community has some right to it, analogous in principle to the country's domain. It cannot be held to injure, or, on the other hand, not to benefit them, which is the case when held in inactivity. Industry is the seal of honor; laziness of shame. The true man abounds in every "good word and work," and has a large soul full of sympathy towards all classes.

In conclusion, the reverend gentleman addressed the members of the Enosinian Society before him, encouraging them in the endeavor to attain to the stature of the true man which he had essayed to describe. Extravagant as the picture might be regarded, he was convinced he had but such men are rare, but there are such in so-cisty, whose walk is so humble as not to attract general observation. They live with a wise refer-ence to the future, looking to God for an approval of their conduct, and in anticipation of a blissful

A MAMMOTH BLOCK OF MARBLE, about fourteen feet in length and seven in breadth, of a thickness tapering from two feet to ten inches, and weighing nearly fifteen tons, was hauled from the railroad station yesterday by a team of eight horses belonging to Mr. Wm. Clark, of the Sixth Miss Ida Walter, one, for improvement in Ward; but when it reached the vicinity of the Centre Market the tire of one of the wheels broke; and, in consequence, locomotive operations had to be suspended until the damage could be repaired. This block is from the quarry of Eliza Smoot, Messrs. Simonton, in Maryland, and is intended as a panel of the pedestal of the Jackson equestrian statue, in Lafayette square. There is other slice of marble of equal dimensions at the station, designed for a similar purpose; and upon these will be inscribed the words which now appear in paint upon the rotting canvass tempora rily placed there.

DANIEL T. WOODWARD.—The friends of this ndividual, who is under sentence of death for the murder of his wife, are making a vigorous effort to have his punishment commuted either to im-prisonment for life in the penitentiary, or banishnent forever beyond the limits of the States and Territories. A memorial for this purpose, adressed to the President of the United States, is now in circulation in Georgetown, and has, we are learn, within the last three days received several hundreds of signatures.

CLEANING THE STREETS .- We noticed laborers t work yesterday on Pennsylvania avenue, removing the filth from the gutters and carting it way. It was a novel sight, and one with which we earnestly hope the inhabitants residing in other parts of the city will forthwith be favored. The alleys might properly come within the range of the sanitary operations.
